IMPEKA are delighted to unleash this behemoth of a release containing just over an hour and thirty minutes of electroacoustic noise, disintegrating tape loops, broken instruments and hacked electronics.

Recorded in a railway arch space in Deptford, this slab of sonics - ranging from sombre to hopeful, meditative to chaotic - grew from a series of improvised jams, fragmented scores and lengthy discussions taking place over a period of several rainy months in early 2017. With time, these fragments and experiments began to come together and make sense as a coherent whole, sewn together by the rumbling of the trains passing by overhead.

Performed by individuals of completely different generations and nationalities, the pieces presented on these discs not only reflect the rapid gentrification of the area in which they were recorded, but also exist as aural contemplations on the climate after United Kingdom's decision to leave the European Union, the most recent presidential election in the United States, as well as the migrant crisis and the rise of far-right politics both in England and continental Europe. The music is perhaps as unsettling, disjointed and confounding as the results of the aforementioned events that linger and continue to affect us.

After a chance meeting in New Cross, Southeast London in 2010, Simon Underwood (ex-Pop Group; Conspirators of Pleasure) and Jonas Gustafsson (IMPEKA) have collaborated in some capacity - most recently during a residency at Usurp Art Space in Harrow together with Poulomi Desai, which resulted in the Conspirators of Pleasure cassette "The Usurp Tapes, Vol. I: Species of Spaces" released in 2017. "Momentary Masters of a Fraction of a Dot" marks this duo's first release, with a number of further collaborative efforts in the works.

NOTES TO EDITORS:

Having co-founded the post-punk outfit The Pop Group, Simon Underwood has been active in experimental music and filmmaking since the early 80's, as well as running a number of independent record labels. His current practice is focused on DIY electronics (circuit bending, hardware hacking and instrument building), free-improv performances and exploring new forms of compositional processes. In 2012 he formed the experimental noise duo Conspirators of Pleasure with Poulomi Desai, discharging their chaotic and extraordinary soundscape performances throughout the UK, Europe and India. Their recent UK-wide "Usurp Chance Tour" together with Stewart Lee explored perceptual concepts of chance, time, listening and humour, and the breadth and parameters of improvisational approaches in new music. In 2015/17 Conspirators of Pleasure contributed two compositions to the forward looking Waywords & Meansigns project setting James Joyce's bizarre novel, "Finnegans Wake" to music. Simon is also the co-founder of the Usurp Art Space in London where he is an associate artist and active contributor to the collective.
